Changing the World Through Understanding Differences

Empowerment and Self-Determination of People with Disabilities: History of a New Social Movement

The disability rights movement has undergone many changes since the birth of the Independent Living Movement in the early 1970's in the United States. Initially based on the ways and means of community-based disability management, disability rights organizations gradually shifted to a greater consideration of the general and specific needs of people with disabilities within the existing social structures. Such transformations have contributed to define the challenges of integrating people with disabilities in the setting of welfare reform. In Western democracies, the recent shift toward a pluralist model of society that is respectful of individual differences, and the recognition of equal opportunity as the cornerstone of the exercise of citizenship have lead to new opportunities and challenges for the disability rights organizations, inspired by the principles and values of independent living in effect, in order to promote freedom of choice and independence for their members.

As of today, advocacy leaders and political authorities are exploring the concepts of empowerment and self-determination, as well as the impact of their implementation into the planning, delivery, and management of services provided to users across every relevant fields of disability. They also suggest a reform of the terms and conditions in which people with disabilities exercise their rights, as they affect the identity issues related to the way they acknowledge themselves within the diversity of human experience.

The Journal of Human Development, Disability, and Social Change is calling for researchers and leaders of disability advocacy organizations to submit their articles focusing on empowerment and self-determination of people with disabilities. We are seeking to publish original works on the changes observed in the disability rights discourse, as well as on the nature of struggles towards greater independence. We are particularly interested in articles addressing the way in which disability rights organizations can contribute to the public debate over the rebuilding of the basis for social solidarity and equality rights. Finally, particular attention will be paid to the articles discussing the relationship between research and disability issues under perspective of emancipation. We encourage authors to choose special cases or to address those phenomena in a global perspective.

Reminder of Requirements for Submitting Articles to be published in Our Journal

Human Development, Disability, and Social Change is looking for original articles, i.e. papers that have not been accepted or published in another publication, which focus on the fields of accommodation, rehabilitation, social participation and human rights advocacy of people with disabilities.

Contributions that are accepted will show explicit:

- a) Theoretical innovation (argumentation quality, concept clarification, importance of the innovation in the field)
- b) Scientific value (coherence, methodological quality, contribution to research advancement) for the publication of research results;
- c) Practical utility (completeness, synthesis quality, transferability, etc.) for knowledge-transfer articles.

Authors should consider placing their own topic into the context of relevant literature pertaining to their research object. They should introduce the current state of knowledge in their field by taking the major contributions into account (books, journals, governmental reports, websites, etc.) If relevant literature is lacking, the author should mention it and demonstrate how his/her article could contribute to improve our understanding of the phenomena.

Authors have to clearly identify the approaches and methodologies they used in conducting their research. Authors are invited to define each concept they expect to use through their article in order to facilitate reviewers' work and readers' understanding.

Authors are also invited to provide feedback on their results in relation to their research question and explain how they invalidate or confirm the findings previously achieved by other contributors in the field. Human Development, Disability, and Social Change encourages authors to discuss the consequences of their results in terms of future research, policies, and professional practice, as well as to make recommendations.

Authors' Commitment

- ✓ I commit myself to producing an article for the ___ issue of Human Development, Disability, and Social Change for the year _____.
- ✓ I recognize that my article submission might be refused for the issue I had selected if my contribution is received after the deadline.
- ✓ I agree, once my article is approved, to complete the Copyrights Transfer Agreement form. My refusal to comply with this requirement will automatically result in Human Development, Disability, and Social Change not publishing my scientific contribution.
- ✓ I understand that published articles and their content are the sole responsibility of their authors.
- ✓ I, the undersigned, hereby agree to these conditions and promise to respect them to the best of my knowledge.

A) A Concise Description of Human Development, Disability, and Social Change

The bilingual journal “Développement humain, handicap et changement social/Human Development, Disability and Social Change” focuses on the development and dissemination of knowledge about personal and environmental determinants of the social participation of people with disabilities. Our journal values “interdisciplinary”, “cross-disability”, and “transgenerational” perspectives: all disciplines and types of impairments and disabilities, as well as age groups are included.

Human Development, Disability & Social Change opens its columns to experimented researchers, postgraduate students, clinicians, and organizations promoting the human rights of people with disabilities who wish to share their research findings and their knowledge-transfer articles. Our journal accepts submissions from authors discussing about the fields of accommodation, rehabilitation, social participation and human rights advocacy of people with disabilities.

Our biannual publication is edited by the International Network on the Disability Creation Network (INDCP), a not-for-profit organization involved in developing and disseminating knowledge based on social change and the achievement of optimal social participation for people with disabilities.

B) Guidelines for Article Submission

Publication Conditions

- Human Development, Disability, and Social Change is looking for original articles, i.e. papers that have not been accepted or published in another publication, which focus on the fields of accommodation, rehabilitation, social participation and human rights advocacy of people with disabilities.
- Any article or additional material approved for publication in Human Development, Disability, and Social Change will remain/become the property of the INDCP, with copyrights assigned to the INDCP.
- Prior to publishing an article and/or supplementary materials, Human Development, Disability, and Social Change makes sure that the authors have completed an Assignment of Copyright Form. Authors are responsible for informing the chief editor if their article contains published material currently protected by copyright.

C) Tips to Authors

- Human Development, Disability, and Social Change is intended for readers with varying degrees of familiarity and comfort with disability-related literature and theories. Authors should be careful to use an accessible language, as well as to clearly define the concepts used throughout their article.
- Authors are authorized to submit articles based upon a conference presentation. However, such contributions will have to respond to the same quality criteria as the other approved articles. Authors must indicate the time and location of the conference they attended.
- Authors should disclose the relevant conference information at the end of the manuscript (ex: This article is issued from a presentation provided at the 2008 INDCP Conference in Quebec City, April 2008.) and provide hyperlinks for the conference homepage or the sponsoring organization.
- Authors should consider placing their own topic into the context of relevant literature pertaining to their research object. They should introduce the current state of knowledge in their field by taking the major contributions into account (books, journals, governmental reports, websites, etc.) If relevant literature is lacking, the author should mention it and demonstrate how his/her article could contribute to improve our understanding of the phenomena.

- Authors have to clearly identify the approaches and methodologies they used in conducting their research. Authors are invited to define each concept they expect to use through their article in order to facilitate reviewers' work and readers' understanding.
- Authors are also invited to provide feedback on their results in relation to their research question and explain how they invalidate or confirm the findings previously achieved by other contributors in the field. Human Development, Disability, and Social Change encourages authors to discuss the consequences of their results in terms of future research, policies, and professional practice, as well as to make recommendations.

D) Important Deadlines

- Submission deadlines: approximately six months prior to publication date (see Human Development, Disability and Social Change publication schedule)
- Estimated review time: 6-8 weeks

E) Arbitration Process

Human Development, Disability, and Social Change reserves the right to publish submitted articles by authors. Modifications to the original text might also be required by the peer review committee before publishing. If those modifications are not done within a reasonable timeframe, we might have to postpone the publication of your contribution in another issue.

If at any moment you believe that your article proposition was the object of an unfair evaluation from the peer review committee, it is possible to contact the chief editor of Human Development, Disability, and Social Change. If deemed appropriate, he will set up a new peer review committee, which will be solely responsible of your article re-evaluation. Human Development, Disability, and Social Change reserves the right to remove any article that does not meet its quality criteria.
